

Dr Bennett is the Chief Executive Officer of the Graduate Union, a global organisation whose members are graduates from a great range of universities, disciplines and life stages. She also heads up Graduate House, a meeting place for not-for-profits, the education sector and government, and a residential college for about 700 postgraduates. Dr Bennett holds a doctorate in neuroscience from Cambridge University (the UK) and worked in the US and Europe before returning to Australia to work at Monash, La Trobe and Melbourne Universities, as well as serving as CEO of the Ian Potter Foundation and the George Alexander Foundation, and with the Defence Science and Technology Organisation. She is committed to the application of collective minds (neuroscience systems) for social good internationally, a task made all the easier in her current position where she enjoys having 'the UN at brekkie' every day.
